

Problem Statement

College students need a better way to manage their time and deadlines because balancing classes, work, and personal life often leads to stress and missed assignments.

Most college students can't find a way to manage college classes, a part-time job, and commitments outside of college. While there are digital calendars or tasks apps available, they each lack the ability to customize and support the unique and everchanging complexity of student life. Students frequently become overwhelmed with conflicting deadlines and poor time sight, which is often leads to stress, burnout, and decreased academic performance. A solution that helps students determine priorities, see the product of their effort, and manage, would ultimately optimize their time, and increase productivity and mental well-being.